Hiring Team, Everpure

Everpure Data Intelligence has to earn three different audiences in one narrative: a CDO who wants governed, AI-ready data, a CISO who wants proof it is secure, and an infrastructure leader who wants to know it will not break the stack. I have built that kind of multi-persona story before. At Sensata, I turned sensing architecture most buyers could not parse into positioning that lifted conversion 15% on priority launches, then built the sales-enablement decks and case studies that let 50+ field reps carry the same story and win 30% more often.

The GTM execution half of this role, owning launches end to end with Product Management and Sales rather than handing off a messaging doc, is also familiar ground. I owned GTM strategy for a new sensing-product line across North America and Europe (positioning, pricing, channel, launch) that drove $2M plus in first-year revenue, and I ran the competitive analysis across EMEA and the US that told Sales where to push. At Applied Materials I do the adjacent work on the pricing side: building competitive, value-based pricing and forecasting models across multiple product groups with Sales, Engineering and Accounts, so the numbers everyone is selling against come from one source.

Cross-functional execution without direct authority is how I have always had to operate. Sales, Engineering and Accounts do not report to Strategic Marketing at Applied Materials any more than Product Management and Corporate Marketing will report to this seat, and the Sensata launch only moved because every function agreed on the plan at the same time. That habit, plus the forecasting and market-sizing models I build across product groups now, maps directly onto standardizing one narrative across global GTM channels for a platform still defining its category.

I also run Claude AI agents against recurring market and pricing analysis at Applied Materials, the same instinct I would bring to keeping competitive positioning and analyst materials current as Data Intelligence's market moves quarter over quarter.
