Hiring Team, Bureau

Your posting measures this job by one question: once a quarterly priority is set, does it actually get executed, or does it stall somewhere between the meeting and the handoff. That is the exact test I ran on the Bleeders and Leakers program at Sensata. I built the dashboard that ranked 1,200 pricing opportunities against a $627M target across 3 regions and 20 product lines, surfaced $433M in margin gaps for leadership to prioritize, and stayed on it until $700K actually landed as recovered margin in two quarters, not a number in a review deck.

At PriceKeel, the company I founded, there is no staff to hand things to, so the operating system runs through me: the CRM and CPQ, the guardrail engine, the deal-approval process, and the investor conversations for our first round. That is closer to owning the operating system the way your posting describes it than a role where a team absorbs the execution risk underneath you.

The rest of the role reads like a checklist I already run. At Applied Materials I turn scattered input from Sales, Engineering and Accounts into one market view and automate the repetitive synthesis with AI agents built on Claude, so more of the week goes to calls that need a human. At Sensata I sat with senior executives shaping AP26 revenue models and site-transition strategy for a multi-$100M business, then built the leadership decks and OKR cadence that kept three regions and four product lines moving on one plan, the kind of multi-region operating rhythm Bureau will need as it scales from APAC into the Americas and Europe.

A seat that sits directly on a founder's agenda and gets measured by whether decisions actually ship, with real ownership of GTM acceleration and operational rigor, is exactly the scope I want next. Proof trail at adhithyabhaskar.vercel.app/ref/bureau.
