Hiring Team, Emeritus

Your posting asks for someone who can take a loosely scoped mandate from the CHRO and turn it into a governed program with an owner, a tracked timeline and a dashboard the executive team actually trusts. That is the exact cycle I ran on Sensata's Bleeders and Leakers program: a $627M target with no visibility into where margin was leaking, no scorecard and no stakeholder cadence behind it. I built the Power BI dashboard that turned 1,200 scattered pricing opportunities into a $433M shortlist prioritized by salesperson and product line, then led the cross-functional negotiation program, planning through execution tracking through stakeholder alignment, that recovered $700K plus of it in two quarters.

Emeritus runs at a scale where a Chief of Staff to the CHRO has to move between strategic analysis and hands-on execution in the same week, and I have built that range deliberately. I founded PriceKeel, a decision-integrity layer for B2B SaaS deal pricing, and own its CRM, CPQ, deal-approval governance and investor narrative end to end while raising its first round, so I know what it takes to turn an ambiguous priority into a structured plan with no playbook to lean on. At Applied Materials today I turn scattered input from Sales, Engineering and Accounts into one shared strategic view for a fast-growing market, and I automate the repetitive side of that synthesis with AI agents built on Claude so the operating cadence does not slow down waiting on me.

Every stop on my résumé has required the same operating rhythm your posting describes for the CHRO's office: build the leadership decks and OKR cadence that keep quarterly business reviews honest, then sit close enough to the work to catch execution bottlenecks before they become a reporting problem. I ran that cadence across a multi-$100M industrial business at Sensata, an 8-person client team at Pixis, and a product I shipped zero-to-one at SwipeHire. Partnering with a CHRO on strategic priorities and cross-functional programs at a 2,000-person, multi-country EdTech company is a bigger stage for the same discipline, not a different one.

What I would bring on day one is a habit of turning ambiguity into a tracked number, the stakeholder management to keep Product, Marketing, Sales, Finance and Operations moving on the same plan, and the executive-presentation instincts that come from building board materials and business cases at every job I have had.
