Hiring Team, Roo

Your posting is explicit that this seat exists because nobody owns the hospital funnel end to end yet, and that gap is the exact shape of the work I already do. At Plug Power I owned $100K/month budgets across multiple business units, deciding every quarter what channel got more spend, what got cut, and what had to wait, then presented that call to leadership for approval. I automated the lead flow between WordPress and Pardot to cut cost per lead 50% and get better-scored leads to the field faster, which is the handoff problem sitting underneath "set lead routing, handoff SLAs, and the rules for which hospitals get a Hospital Success Partner."

The harder half of your role is activation, not just sign-ups, and that is where I actually spend my time. At Sensata I ran 30+ customer interviews with OEMs and distributors to find exactly where interest stalled before purchase, then turned that into fixes that lifted CSAT 22% and conversion 15%, and I built the sales enablement 50+ reps used to close, which moved win rates 30%. That is the same root-cause-then-fix loop your first-fill playbook needs, and the same reason a growth function has to sit this close to the field team instead of handing off a lead and walking away.

Retention is where I would bring the sharpest opinion. At Pixis I carried P&L for an 8-client, $15K-90K-per-client portfolio and cut churn 50% through account strategy and channel diversification, deciding weekly with Amplitude and Tableau what to scale or cut. The instinct I would bring to your dormant-hospital reactivation work is to treat it as a channel in its own right with its own CAC and payback math, not a leftover campaign that gets whatever budget is left after acquisition. I would rather build that holdout-tested measurement model on day one than retrofit it once the acquisition number already looks good on its own.

I use Claude AI agents daily to automate my own reporting at Applied Materials, so I already have a point of view on where agents can take over outreach and where a Hospital Success Partner still has to be the one on the phone. Proof trail at adhi-growth-ai.vercel.app/ref/roo.
