Hiring Team, HealthEdge

At Sensata I built the competitive battlecards and buyer personas that 50 plus reps pulled up mid-deal, not a library nobody opened, and win rates went up 30% because of it. Your posting asks for exactly that: synthesize competitive intelligence into battlecards, build personas that cover the buyer's full purchasing process, and keep the sales enablement library current. That is the specific work I already do, not a general marketing background I am stretching to fit.

The other half of the role, turning 30 plus customer interviews into testimonials and case studies that feed both sales and the product roadmap, is the same loop I ran at Sensata: structured OEM and distributor interviews fed straight into positioning and raised CSAT 22%, and the enablement built off that research is what moved win rates. I also carried a full product launch end to end, positioning, pricing, channel and launch for a new sensing line, to 2 million dollars plus in first year revenue, which is the same cross-functional sequence HealthEdge Source launches need: product, pricing, packaging and demand generation moving together instead of in sequence.

The market and competitive intelligence muscle behind all of this was built inside regulated, technical buyer environments: clean energy at Plug Power and automotive and aerospace compliance at Sensata, where the purchasing process and the cost of an unverified claim look a lot like what a health plan buyer expects. A graduate consulting project for Safran had me build personas across four verticals including healthcare, narrowing a market of 170 facilities down to a defensible SAM of 28, so translating a technical product into a regulated buyer's language is work I have already run more than once.

I am also running Strategic Marketing III at Applied Materials right now, where I automate the repetitive side of market and pricing analysis with AI agents built on Claude, the same kind of workflow discipline that keeps a battlecard and persona library current instead of stale six months after a competitor moves.
