Hiring Team, Confidential Employer (via Intellectual Capital HR Consulting)

At PriceKeel, the company I founded, nobody hands me a management dashboard to fill in; I build it myself. I run the CRM and CPQ, sit in the forecast and pipeline reviews, sign off on deal approvals, and built the financial model and audit trail now carrying the company through its first fundraising round. That is the same work this seat does for a founder: turn scattered revenue, margin and channel data into the structured review a founder can act on the same day, and flag the one deviation that actually needs their attention instead of twelve that do not.

Before PriceKeel, I built that discipline inside a much bigger business. At Sensata I led the Bleeders and Leakers program end to end: a Power BI system that scored 1,200 pricing opportunities against a $627M target across 3 regions and 20 product lines, then closed $700K+ of that gap in 2 quarters through negotiations with Sales and Finance I had no formal authority to compel. I also partnered directly with senior executives on AP26 revenue models and site-transition strategy, the kind of financial analysis and planning support a founder needs before a board meeting or an investor call, not after.

At Applied Materials now, I turn ambiguous field input from Sales, Engineering and Accounts into one market view, running the OKR cadence with weekly and quarterly business reviews so priorities and blockers stay visible across teams with no shared manager. I automate the repetitive half of that analysis with AI agents built on Claude, which frees the hours that should go toward the judgment call at the end of the spreadsheet, not the formatting.

On the people and project side, I have hired and managed teams directly, including an 8-person account team at Pixis running 8 client relationships on individual P&L targets, and led a 5-consultant team through a market-sizing and go-to-market study for Safran, narrowing 170 facilities to a target list of 28 and presenting the recommendation to their leadership. Business analysis that turns into a decision, cross-functional execution without a title to lean on, and fundraising-grade financial materials: I have already run each of these, just at a different company's scale every time.
