Hiring Team, Writer

Scaling paid campaigns with AI and going deeper on ABM for enterprise accounts usually pull a paid marketing manager in opposite directions. I build toward both already. At Applied Materials I use AI agents built on Claude to run my own forecasting and market-sizing reporting, because rebuilding the same analysis every cycle wastes everyone's time. Using AI to personalize and scale, not just automate, is the same instinct this role is asking for.

The enterprise account rigor is just as direct. At Sensata I shaped multimillion-dollar customer quotes and AP26 revenue models with senior executives, the kind of long sales cycle paid programs have to stay in step with. At Plug Power I owned $100K/month in paid budgets across multiple business units, running Paid Search and Paid Social across Google Ads, Microsoft Ads, Meta and LinkedIn, cutting CPA 25% while a rebuilt lead-flow automation cut cost per lead 50%. At Pixis I carried P&L for an 8-client, $15K-$90K-per-client-per-month portfolio and cut churn 50% through account-specific strategy, which is ABM logic one client at a time.

I have also run paid and email campaigns together, not in separate lanes: at Sensata, aligning paid media with lifecycle and brand messaging drove +35% qualified leads. Reporting into lifecycle marketing is a coordination problem I already know how to run, not just a new reporting line to learn.
