Hiring Team, Oblq

Your posting says you already have products customers love, good data, a brand and a point of view, and you need someone who can build the repeatable engine around them. That is the exact job I did at Sensata: take a new, unfamiliar sensing product line with real engineering behind it and turn it into one go-to-market motion (positioning, pricing, channel, launch) that closed its first year at $2M+ in revenue. The hard part was never the launch plan. It was translating something genuinely technical into language an owner who is not an engineer would act on, the same translation independent agency owners need from Oblq.

Before I wrote a word of that positioning, I ran 30+ interviews with OEMs and distributors to learn how they actually bought and where they got skeptical. I would want to spend the same time with independent agency owners and agents: how they generate leads, quote business, work with carriers, and decide to trust new software. The case studies and sales-enablement decks I built off those Sensata interviews gave 50+ reps the objection-handling and competitive positioning that lifted win rates 30%, which is close to the sales-enablement and customer-storytelling work this role owns.

I carry the research side too. I track competitors and buyer behavior in SQL and GA4 (across EMEA and the US at Sensata, and now at Applied Materials where I use AI agents built on Claude to speed up the recurring analysis), and I have run demand gen through paid search, paid social and SEO at Plug Power. Your list of skills puts AI tools for research and content alongside nine other things rather than treating it as the whole pitch, and that matches how I already use it: to get through the research and first drafts faster, not as the point of the job.

Working directly with the founders at this stage, with room to define a launch plan in the morning and write the landing page in the afternoon, is the kind of early-stage GTM work I want next. Proof trail at adhi-product.vercel.app/ref/oblq. Happy to talk whenever works on your side.
