Hiring Team, Harvey

At Plug Power I owned $100K/month in marketing budgets across multiple business units and walked every plan through leadership for sign-off before a dollar went out the door. That is the discipline this role is built on: own the budget, the vendors and the calendar end to end, not just show up the day of.

The partnership half is familiar too. At Applied Materials I sit between Sales, Engineering and Accounts every week to keep one market view current, without owning any of those three functions directly. At Sensata I built the sales enablement content and case studies that took a 50-rep team's win rate up 30%, after running 30+ interviews with OEM and distributor partners to find what was actually stalling a deal before I wrote a word of it. Building territory-based programs alongside a GTM team is the same instinct at a different scale: find what Sales genuinely needs in a region, then build the program and the playbook around it.

I also hired and ran an 8-person team managing 8 client accounts at Pixis, each with its own budget, vendor mix and vertical playbook, and cut churn 50% doing it. Running a portfolio of accounts with different needs on a shared process is close to what running first-party and third-party programs across US regions asks for.

Harvey builds on frontier agentic AI, and I build with it. I automate forecasting and reporting with Claude agents at Applied Materials, and I shipped an AI product, SwipeHire, on the OpenAI API from a blank PRD to 50+ users. Running the field program for a company whose product I would also want to use is a different kind of credibility with the room.
