Hiring Team, Visa

At Sensata I built the FY2026 Bleeders and Leakers dashboard: 1,200 pricing opportunities ranked against a $627M target across 3 regions and 4 product families, with $433M in margin gaps surfaced so leadership could see exactly where to put resources first. That is a portfolio planning exercise under a different name, and it is the same discipline your Marketing Strategy & Portfolio Planning role needs applied across Consumer, B2B and Marketing Services: one view of where the investment is going and where it should go next.

The muscle behind that dashboard is strategic synthesis under ambiguity. At Applied Materials now, I size the semiconductor market in partnership with Sales, Engineering and Accounts, turning scattered field input into one market view that carries investment-prioritization decisions, with recurring analysis automated through Claude AI agents so more time goes into the judgment calls that actually need a person. Earlier, I led a 5-consultant team at Safran that took 170 facilities down to a SAM of 28 across 4 verticals and presented the market-entry case straight to their leadership, the same kind of executive-ready narrative a Senior Director of Strategy, Planning and Operations would expect to see on their desk.

What draws me to this specific opening is that it sits exactly where I have spent the last two years: connecting strategy to execution instead of living on either side of that line alone. I carry P&L and revenue targets, build the leadership decks and run the OKR reviews that turn a portfolio view into a decision, and I would bring that same habit to a North America Marketing portfolio spanning three very different businesses.
