Hiring Team, Confidential Consumer Brand (via The Bridge Associates)

"Work closely with the founder on strategic priorities, business planning, execution of key initiatives" is a job I already hold, just at a company of one. I founded PriceKeel, a B2B SaaS deal-pricing company now in pilots and raising its first round, and there is no one else to hand a problem to: I set up the CRM and pipeline reviews, run the forecast and deal approvals, and take investor and customer signal straight into the next product and growth call. That is the exact motion your client needs from an EIR sitting next to the founder of a young, fast-growing brand.

The rest of the req reads like a list of things I already run across functions. At Sensata I built the FY2026 pricing dashboard that ranked 1,200 opportunities against a $627M target, then used it to lead the Bleeders and Leakers program, recovering $700K+ in margin in two quarters by working the negotiations it pointed to alongside Sales and Finance. At Applied Materials I turn scattered input from Sales, Engineering and Accounts into one market view and carry P&L and revenue targets while doing it. At Pixis I hired and ran an 8-person team across 8 D2C clients, including retail media and e-commerce catalog work, and cut churn 50% through account strategy that identified new growth angles before clients asked for them. Different industries, same pattern: track the metrics, find the gap, build the plan that closes it.

I like the ambiguity your posting is honest about. PriceKeel is proof I can sit with an undefined problem and build the structure around it myself, and SwipeHire, an AI product I shipped solo from a blank page to 50+ users, is the same habit applied without a team behind me. I would bring that same bias for action to a founder who needs someone who can move across sales, marketing, e-commerce, operations and finance without waiting to be told which function owns the problem this week.
