Hiring Team, Airwallex

Your posting asks for someone who bridges customers, commercial and product teams so positioning stays consistent and simple, specifically for Business Accounts. That is the job I already had at Sensata, where I owned GTM end to end for a brand-new sensing product line: positioning, pricing, channel and launch, no handoff in between. I turned the technical spec sheet into a value proposition our buyers actually understood, which lifted conversion 15% on our priority launches, and I would do the same translation for a business-account suite that lives or dies on whether a finance buyer can explain the value to their own leadership in one sentence.

The sales-enablement half of this role is where I spend the most energy. I built the decks, battlecards and case studies that 50+ reps used to shorten deal cycles on enterprise OEM and distributor accounts, and win rates went up 30% because the material matched the stage a rep was actually in, not a generic one-size-fits-all pitch. Upmarket deals move at the pace of the material behind them, and I have already built that material for accounts with long cycles and multiple stakeholders.

I also do not wait for the roadmap to hand me an assumption. I ran 30+ structured interviews with OEM and distributor buyers before writing a line of messaging, then checked that read against SQL and GA4 usage signals before it shipped, the same qualitative-plus-quantitative loop your team wants feeding the Business Accounts roadmap. At Applied Materials today I size markets jointly with Sales, Engineering and Accounts, and I automate the repetitive side of that analysis with AI agents built on Claude so more of my week goes to the customer read and less to the spreadsheet.

What I would bring to Business Accounts is a positioning and enablement track record already built for upmarket deal cycles, plus a pricing background (price realignment that drove +12% YoY revenue and +8% market share at Sensata) that understands how a finance buyer actually decides.
