Hiring Team, SupplyValid

Your posting measures the job by one question: did we carry out the decisions we made. That was the test I set for the Bleeders and Leakers program at Sensata. I built the dashboard that ranked 1,200 pricing opportunities against a $627M target and surfaced $433M in margin gaps, then did not stop until $700K of it landed as recovered margin in two quarters, not a slide in a review deck. Pricing and commercial architecture is where I spend my time, and it is apparently where this seat spends real time too.

At PriceKeel, the company I founded, there is no team to hand things to, so the CRM, CPQ, deal approvals, guardrail engine and investor conversations all run through me. That is closer to the operating mode your posting describes than a traditional strategy role with staff underneath it: fewer people to delegate to, more personal ownership of whether a decision actually gets executed end to end.

The rest of the role reads like a checklist I already run. At Sensata I sat with senior executives shaping AP26 revenue models and site-transition strategy for a multi-$100M business, then built the leadership decks and OKR reviews that kept three regions and four product lines aligned on one plan. At Applied Materials today I turn scattered input from Sales, Engineering and Accounts into one market view, and automate the repetitive synthesis with AI agents built on Claude so more of the week goes to the judgment calls an executive agenda actually needs.

A strict 2-year run built around one CEO's agenda, with pricing, multi-entity governance and investor-facing work all sitting in the same seat, is the kind of concentrated scope I would want next. Proof trail at adhithyabhaskar.vercel.app/ref/supplyvalid.
