Hiring Team, Snapmint

The clearest answer I have to whether I can build a tracker a founder will actually read is the one I built at Sensata: a Power BI tool that ranked 1,200 pricing opportunities against a $627M target and surfaced $433M in margin risk before anyone asked for it, which then fed into a $700K plus recovery across two quarters. That is the loop this Founder's Office seat is asking for: track it, flag the risk early, and turn it into a decision someone can act on.

I also know what it means to make the call with no one to escalate to. I started PriceKeel this year, a B2B SaaS pricing company, and I am the one who decided how to segment buyers into RevOps, Sales leadership and Finance, built the product and go-to-market around what each group needed, and am now running pilots while raising the company's first round. Supporting a founder through high-stakes, ambiguous decisions is a different job once you have had to make those decisions yourself, with your own money on the line.

The cross-functional half of this role is already my day job. At Applied Materials I partner across Sales, Engineering and Accounts to turn scattered field input into one view leadership can act on, then automate the repetitive research behind it with AI agents built on Claude so the analysis keeps pace with the decision. That same instinct, build the framework, track the risk, close the loop, is how I approached a five-consultant market-sizing engagement during my MS, narrowing 170 facilities to a SAM of 28 and presenting the result directly to Safran's leadership.

Snapmint is scaling a zero-cost EMI business across 2,500 cities and 10 million consumers, and a seat in the founder's office there needs someone who can move between a dashboard and a leadership call in the same afternoon, at the pace high-stakes weeks demand. I have been doing exactly that since 2021, across a large industrial company, an AI platform, and now a company I run myself. Proof trail at adhithyabhaskar.vercel.app/ref/snapmint.
