Hiring Team, Logitech

Your posting for the Global eB2B Channel Marketing Manager asks for someone who has already run paid campaigns on a marketplace, not just read about one. At Pixis I ran Amazon Ads and Criteo retail-media campaigns on Amazon's marketplace across an 8-client D2C portfolio, and got a leading fashion brand to 3x ROAS in a single month by rebuilding the shopping feed and resetting the bid strategy. That is the same channel, the same pressure to show RoAS and CTR fast, just on the retailer side instead of the brand side, which is exactly the switch this role asks for.

The rest of the job is a cross-functional alignment problem dressed up as a marketing one, and I have run that version of it too. At Sensata I owned end-to-end GTM for new sensing products through a network of OEM and distributor partners, which meant turning the same technical spec into a different story for Sales, for Engineering, and for the distributor who actually has to sell it, while running 30+ interviews with those partners to find where the story broke down. I later moved into pricing for the same business and raised distributor margins from 53% to 61%, so I have sat on both sides of a channel-partner negotiation, not just the marketing side of it.

On the testing and analytics half: at Plug Power I ran 15+ A/B tests across Paid Search and Paid Social, cutting CPA 25% while lifting conversion 20%, and at Pixis I used Amplitude and Tableau across 30+ live campaigns to lift ROAS 40%. I am now Strategic Marketing III at Applied Materials, sizing a fast-growing market with Sales and Engineering and running AI agents built on Claude against the recurring analysis, the same instinct to automate the repetitive half of the job so more time goes to the campaign and the channel partner.

I would bring that same mix to Amazon for Business and the eB2B resellers on your list: close the loop between a channel strategy, the creative that actually converts on that platform, and the number that tells you it worked. Proof trail at adhi-product.vercel.app/ref/logitech.
