Hiring Team, YourDOST

At PriceKeel, the company I founded, I am the entire org chart for the initiative: I identified the governance gap in B2B SaaS deal pricing, designed the guardrail engine and audit trail that closes it, and now run the CRM and CPQ, forecast and pipeline reviews, and deal approvals myself while raising the company's first round. That is close to the exact mandate in this posting: take one ambiguous problem, own the P&L and targets around it, and scale it into something a team eventually runs.

Before PriceKeel, I built that same muscle inside a much bigger business. At Sensata I headed the Bleeders and Leakers margin program end to end: designed a Power BI dashboard that turned 1,200 scattered pricing opportunities against a $627M target into one tracked system across 3 regions and 20 product lines, then closed $700K+ of that gap in 2 quarters through negotiations with Sales and Finance I had no formal authority to compel. I was promoted to Pricing Lead in 10 months and went on to partner directly with senior executives on AP26 revenue models and site-transition strategy, the kind of ambiguous, leadership-level problem that gets handed to whoever can actually solve it.

At Applied Materials now, I turn scattered field and technical input from Sales, Engineering and Accounts into one market view, and run the OKR cadence with weekly and quarterly business reviews so the one metric that needs attention does not get lost among the ones that do not. I automate the repetitive half of that analysis with AI agents built on Claude, the kind of process and reporting design this seat asks for too: fewer manual reports, more decisions a founder can act on.

On the people side, I have hired and managed teams at the point an initiative actually needs them, not before. I built an 8-person account team at Pixis once client budgets justified it, cutting churn 50% through the account strategy I designed, and hired and managed the marketing team at Plug Power while owning $100K/month budgets across multiple business units. I have also sat in the liaison seat with no formal authority, between regional, localization and analytics teams at GenY Medium, and led a 5-consultant team through a market-sizing study for Safran, narrowing 170 facilities to a target list of 28. Identify the problem, build the system that solves it, then build the team to scale it: that is the shape of every role on this resume, and I would like it to be the shape of this one.
