Hiring Team, Harvey

Your posting says paid social has to carry pipeline and revenue for enterprise legal buyers with long, complex sales cycles, not just awareness. That is the exact shape of the budget I owned at Plug Power: $100K/month across LinkedIn, Meta, Google Ads and Microsoft Ads, planned and paced against forecasts I built and presented to leadership myself. The part that actually moved the number was not the bidding, it was automating the Salesforce, Adobe Analytics and Google Tag Manager stack so every campaign tied back to MQL quality and stage 1 pipeline instead of clicks. That cut CPA 25% and cost per lead 50%, and it is the same closed-loop discipline a long enterprise sales cycle needs from paid social.

Your audience-strategy ask, first-party data, account-based targeting, lookalike modeling, platform-native targeting, is work I have already run at account level. At Pixis I managed an 8-person team across 8 enterprise client accounts running $15K-$90K/month each, building the segments in Amplitude and Tableau that lifted ROAS 40% and cut churn 50%. At Sensata I built KPI frameworks in SQL and GA4 across 50K+ connected devices to find the accounts worth targeting before a dollar went against them, then carried the enterprise side through multimillion-dollar customer quotes and 50+ rep sales enablement as Pricing Lead. Full-funnel, account-aware targeting is not new territory for me, it is the job I have been doing.

I test in public rather than guess. At Plug Power I ran 15+ A/B tests across 50+ inbound campaigns and closed the keyword and audience gaps they surfaced; at Pixis I restructured a fashion brand's full funnel end to end, feed cleanup through lookalike expansion, for 3x ROAS in a single month. That is the experimentation framework your posting describes: creative, messaging, audience and landing page tests that compound instead of one-off swaps. I also automate the reporting side of that work with Claude AI agents at Applied Materials today, so the analytics team gets a partner who already treats measurement as infrastructure, not a monthly deck.

What I would bring to Harvey is a manager who has already run the pacing, bid strategy, audience-enrichment and CRM plumbing this role needs at seven-figure-adjacent scale, and who ties every campaign decision back to pipeline for buyers who take months to close, not clicks.
