Hiring Team, PlanetArt

At Pixis I rebuilt a leading fashion brand's funnel in a single month: shopping feed cleanup, smart bidding, creative refresh and lookalike expansion took it to 3x ROAS. That is the same lever your paid search role runs on across FreePrints, Simply to Impress, Personal Creations and the rest of the portfolio: Google Ads and Microsoft Ads performance that holds up across more than one catalog at once.

Before that, at GenY Medium I rebuilt Google Merchant Center and Meta catalog feeds for D2C e-commerce brands and pushed ROAS to 16x. Feed hygiene is where most paid search budgets leak on a catalog business, and it is the first place I would look across your photo and personalization lines.

At Plug Power I owned Google Ads and Microsoft Ads alongside Meta and LinkedIn across several business units at once, cutting CPA 25% through keyword and bid-strategy work and trimming wasted spend 15%. I also closed the gap between paid and organic, which lifted organic search visibility 35%, so the paid budget stopped carrying queries that should have ranked on their own. That same discipline, test it, measure it, cut what is not paying back, is what I would bring to PlanetArt's Google account relationship and the new betas your team tries out.

I now automate a good share of my own campaign reporting with Claude agents at Applied Materials, mostly so more of the week goes to the testing queue instead of pulling numbers. I would want to run that same cadence against PlanetArt's paid search budgets.
