Hiring Team, Doodhvale Farms

Doodhvale's D2C business nearly doubled this past year while overall revenue grew 65%, and that is exactly the kind of curve where a Founder's Office seat earns its keep: someone has to turn the growth into a repeatable operating rhythm before it outruns the team. I have run that stretch on the vendor side of dairy's exact category. At Pixis I carried the P&L for 8 D2C accounts and cut client churn 50% by building the playbooks that let growth scale without breaking service, and at GenY Medium I rebuilt the product feeds behind a D2C brand's catalog and got 16x ROAS out of the fix. Doorstep-delivery D2C has operating problems most Founder's Office candidates have only read about; I have solved them from inside the account.

The rest of the seat is whatever cross-functional problem the founder hands you next, and I run that job two ways right now. PriceKeel is the company I founded: I set up the CRM and pipeline reviews, sell into RevOps, Sales leadership and Finance, and I am the one running pilots and raising the first round, so I know what it costs to build structure with no playbook. Inside Applied Materials I turn scattered input from Sales, Engineering and Accounts into one market view leadership can act on, and I run the OKR cadence behind weekly and quarterly business reviews so cross-functional teams stay pointed at the same number. Before either job, I led a 5-consultant team that sized a 170-facility market down to a SAM of 28 and presented the pricing and market-entry call straight to Safran's leadership, the same ambiguous, board-facing problem a Founder's Office gets handed on a Tuesday.

I have hired and managed teams end to end, from the 8-person account team at Pixis to the team behind my own SwipeHire product, so staffing this out is not new ground. And I already run Claude agents to automate the repetitive research and reporting behind my own reviews, so a lean founder's office does not have to spend its own hours on busywork.
