Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar

San Francisco Bay Area, CA | arokhith@gmail.com | +1-929-563-9974

October 21, 2026

Hiring Team, Alignment Research Center

Your posting describes a chief of staff who defines the workflows and structure for a growing organization rather than inheriting them, and that is the exact job I already run. As founder of PriceKeel I built the company's CRM, CPQ, forecast and pipeline reviews and deal-approval process from a blank page, the same from-scratch operating design ARC needs as it scales past a small conceptual-research team.

Hiring is named as a core responsibility here, and I have real reps at it: I hired and managed an 8-person team at Pixis and hired and managed marketing staff at Plug Power, both while carrying P&L accountability for the results that team produced. I would bring that same discipline to defining ARC's sourcing strategy and running its hiring and decision meetings.

The operations and long tail, from managing an ops manager on legal, finance and immigration to helping figure out office plans, is the unglamorous half of a chief of staff role that actually determines whether the glamorous half works. I built an audit trail at PriceKeel that gives Finance a record it can defend, and I am personally running the investor conversations behind the company's first round, so board prep and compensation-policy design are not abstractions to me.

ARC is explicit that AI is increasingly how the organization scales, and I already run AI agents built on Claude against my own research and reporting work at Applied Materials, not as a pilot but as how I work day to day. Proof trail at adhithyabhaskar.vercel.app/ref/alignment-research-center.

Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar