Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar

San Francisco Bay Area, CA | arokhith@gmail.com | +1-929-563-9974

October 13, 2026

Hiring Team, Nectar Social

Your posting says the forecast model, the Salesforce instance and the FY27 commission framework already work and your first hire's job is to run them day one, then make them better. That is a different ask than "build RevOps from scratch," and it is the one I actually have reps on. I run PriceKeel's CRM, CPQ, forecast reviews and deal approvals myself as the company's only ops person, which means I do not get to hand off the parts that are tedious: I set up the pipeline, I run the weekly review, and I write the audit trail Finance would need if anyone asked a hard question about a discount.

That habit is where the Bleeders and Leakers work at Sensata came from. I built the Power BI dashboard that tracked 1,200 pricing opportunities against a $627M target by region and salesperson, but the dashboard was not the point. The $700K+ I recovered in the two quarters after came from sitting in deal reviews and fixing the structures the dashboard flagged, the same loop your deal desk section describes: order forms, pricing approvals, discount governance, non-standard structures that need someone who will actually chase the fix instead of just reporting the gap. I raised distributor margins from 53% to 61% the same way, deal by deal, through Finance and Sales sign-off.

Two things about your role read like they were written for how I already work. First, the quote-to-cash seam between sales and finance systems: I built PriceKeel's audit trail precisely because that handoff is where discount decisions, and the money tied to them, go missing, which is the same discipline commission accuracy needs. Second, the non-standard fiscal calendar and the ask to ship one automation in the first 90 days: I automate my own recurring revenue analysis with Claude agents at Applied Materials because the parts of this job that repeat should not eat the hours that the roadmap work needs.

At 60 people there is no RevOps team yet to hide inside, which is exactly the kind of seat I have been building toward on my own. Proof trail at adhithyabhaskar.vercel.app/ref/nectar-social.

Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar