Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar

San Francisco Bay Area, CA | arokhith@gmail.com | +1-929-563-9974

November 10, 2026

Hiring Team, Zilliz

Your posting describes growth at Zilliz as going beyond traffic and leads: identifying where a developer or an enterprise buyer is in the journey, then building and testing the landing page or lifecycle touch that moves them forward. That is the loop I ran at Plug Power, where I owned $100K/month in paid budgets and used direct A/B testing on landing pages and funnels to cut CPA 25% and cost per lead 50%.

The technical-audience piece of this role is where I would add the most. At Sensata I built KPI frameworks in SQL and GA4 across 50K+ connected devices to separate accounts that actually adopted a feature from ones that stalled, the same adoption-versus-drop-off read a self-service, consumption-based product needs. I also automate recurring analysis today with AI agents built on Claude, so working inside AI-assisted tooling to launch and iterate without waiting on engineering is already how I operate day to day.

Experimentation end to end is the other half. At Pixis I ran full-funnel restructuring for an 8-client portfolio, shopping feed cleanup, bidding, creative and audience work, that delivered 3x ROAS in a single month for one account, and used Amplitude and Tableau to turn campaign data into the next test rather than a report nobody acts on. That same build-test-measure loop, repeatable and not a one-off win, is what I would bring to Zilliz's acquisition and conversion work.

I would welcome the chance to talk through how I would sequence growth experiments against Zilliz Cloud's self-service funnel. More of this work is at adhi-growth-ai.vercel.app/ref/zilliz.

Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar