

Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar

San Francisco Bay Area, CA | arokhith@gmail.com | +1-929-563-9974

October 4, 2026

Hiring Team, TravClan

Your posting says this role is not for someone who expects a founder-shadowing, research or presentation-led seat. I am not shadowing a founder right now, I am one: PriceKeel is the B2B SaaS pricing product I started from a single hypothesis, and I built its guardrail engine, set up its own CRM and CPQ, and am now running pilots with early customers while raising the first round myself. That is the exact motion your EIR seat is built around: turn a broad question into a hypothesis, a business case and an execution plan, then go get evidence from real customers before scaling anything.

I have run that motion before with a number attached. At Sensata I owned GTM for a new sensing-product line with no existing playbook across North America and Europe: positioning, pricing, channel, launch, closing $2M+ in first-year revenue off 30+ customer discovery interviews with OEMs and distributors. At Plug Power I tested paid channels and pricing against a defined revenue target rather than a vague growth goal, cutting CPA 25% and automating the reporting loop so the team could see which channel was actually working. Both were 0-to-1 problems inside someone else's P&L, which is closer to what TravClan needs from this seat than a pure founder-support background would be.

TravClan's own numbers are part of why I am writing: INR 1,000 crore+ GMV built on internal cashflow discipline, plus outside capital to go faster, is the kind of base that makes a 0-to-1 bet worth taking seriously rather than running as a side experiment. I would want to pick up a specific growth-loop or channel-partnership hypothesis in the travel-agent funnel first, test it against a real adoption or revenue number, and report back with evidence rather than a deck.

Proof trail at adhithyabhaskar.vercel.app/ref/travclan.

Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar