Hiring Team, Instacart

Your posting lists five things a deal needs at once: velocity, risk review, a clean Quote-to-Cash process, cross-functional trust, and room to absorb new pricing models without breaking. Most candidates can point to one of those. I have run all five, on both sides of the desk.

At Sensata, I sat on the sales side of that loop: reading multimillion-dollar customer quotes and AP26 revenue models for risk, approving terms before signature, as part of a Bleeders and Leakers program that recovered $700K plus in margin in two quarters and raised distributor margins from 53% to 61%. That program did not stay a one-off win. It became a BU-wide Power BI system tracking 1,200 pricing opportunities against a $627M target across 3 regions, 4 product families and 20 product lines, the kind of structure a growing deal desk needs in place before volume arrives, not scrambled together after.

As founder of PriceKeel, I am now on the system-ownership side of the same loop. I set up and run the CRM, CPQ configuration, forecast and pipeline reviews, and deal approvals myself, and I built the audit trail that records the human pricing decision with evidence Finance can actually check. That is the same confidence your posting says Finance, Tax and Legal need in what gets booked, built by someone who has to answer to his own investors when the record is wrong.

I would bring that same discipline to Instacart's Sales-Finance-Tax-Legal intersection: fast, correct deal review paired with a system built to survive an audit. Proof trail at adhi-pricing-ai.vercel.app/ref/instacart.
