Hiring Team, Rippling

Your posting asks for someone who can build the monthly and quarterly reporting layer that turns Marketing's numbers into decisions, not a dashboard nobody reads. I built exactly that at Sensata, where a Power BI system I built tracked 1,200 pipeline opportunities against a $627M target and surfaced $433M in margin gaps that leadership used to decide where to focus the next quarter.

At PriceKeel, the company I founded, I run the CRM, CPQ and forecast-and-pipeline-review cadence myself, the same operating loop this role runs for the Marketing organization: frame the business problem, fix or build the system behind it, and hold the line with Finance and RevOps when the plan and the data disagree.

That same AP26 revenue-modeling work at Sensata, built alongside senior executives on multimillion-dollar customer quotes, is the annual planning and target-setting cycle your posting describes. I also know what a reporting system has to prove to a Marketing team that did not build it: at Sensata I shipped the sales enablement that lifted win rates 30% for 50+ reps, so I design dashboards to survive contact with the people acting on them, not just leadership's first look.

I would bring someone who has already run this cadence end to end: framed the problem, built the system, and sat across the table from Marketing, Sales and Finance when the numbers moved. Proof trail at adhithyabhaskar.vercel.app/ref/rippling.
