Hiring Team, Sova Health

Your posting calls the founder's office the engine room: the team that takes a messy, cross-functional problem across Growth, Sales, Operations, Marketing, Product and HR and turns it into a plan with a number attached. That is the room I already run for PriceKeel, the company I founded. I own the full operating system myself, CRM and CPQ, forecast and pipeline reviews, deal approvals, and the investor-facing materials behind the fundraise, because there is no cofounder to hand any of it to.

At Applied Materials I partner with Sales, Engineering and Accounts to turn scattered field and technical input into one market view, run the OKR cadence of weekly and quarterly business reviews that keeps a fast-moving initiative visible instead of stuck in someone's inbox, and automate the repetitive half of that research with AI agents built on Claude, the kind of automation instinct your posting flags as a bonus rather than a requirement.

Before that, at Sensata I built the Power BI dashboard that turned 1,200 scattered pricing opportunities against a $627M target into one tracked system across 3 regions, then closed $700K of that gap in two quarters through negotiations with Sales and Finance I had no formal authority to compel, work that got me promoted to Pricing Lead in 10 months and put me in the room with senior executives on site-transition strategy. I also led a 5-consultant team through a market-sizing study for Safran, narrowing 170 facilities to a target list of 28 and presenting the recommendation directly to Safran's leadership, the same market and competitive research your posting asks the founder's office to own.

I have hired and managed teams at three companies, including an 8-person account team at Pixis that cut churn 50 percent, and I build the leadership decks, dashboards and reports in Excel, PowerPoint and Notion that turn that work into something a founder can act on in one read. Research the problem, build the system that tracks it, then get the right people and process around it: that is the shape of every role on this resume, and I would like it to be the shape of Sova's founder's office too.
