Hiring Team, BitGo

Your posting wants someone who has personally driven a launch from strategy through execution, not just supported one. At Sensata, I built the sales-enablement system behind a new-product launch, battlecards, case studies and the positioning underneath them, for 50+ reps, and it moved their win rate 30%. That work started with competitive benchmarking across 10+ players and 30+ structured customer interviews with OEMs and distributors, so the story Sales carried into the field was built on what buyers actually said, not what a deck assumed.

I'm building on that same instinct now as founder of PriceKeel, a decision-integrity layer for B2B SaaS deal pricing. It's a fintech-adjacent category with no inherited playbook, which is close to the challenge your posting describes: an established company defining a category that's still being written. I like that framing. It's the same reason I set up PriceKeel's own CRM, CPQ and deal approvals from scratch rather than wait for someone to hand me a process.

Cross-functional leadership is the part of this role I'd expect to spend the most time on, and it's the part I already run. At Applied Materials I size market opportunity by pulling Sales, Engineering and Accounts into one view instead of working from a single team's input, and at Sensata I owned GTM strategy end to end, positioning, pricing, channel and launch, across North America and Europe. Neither of those came with a brief that answered every question up front; both needed someone to turn ambiguity into a plan Sales could execute.

On the AI-forward piece: I use it as part of how I work, not a side project. I automate recurring competitive and market analysis with agents built on Claude so the research time goes into sharper positioning instead of rebuilding the same report every cycle.
