Hiring Team, Intuit

Your posting for the Integrated Campaign Lead on Mid-Market Demand Generation asks for someone who can own campaign architecture across products and segments, then run it across email, paid media, web, events and sales without losing the thread between teams. That is the exact pattern I ran at Sensata, where I owned the go-to-market launch for a new sensing product line across North America and Europe end to end: positioning, pricing, channel plan and cross-channel execution across email and paid media. It closed its first year at $2M+ in revenue and drove +35% qualified leads, and I built the KPI frameworks in SQL and GA4 that connected that execution back to pipeline, not just activity.

Cross-channel orchestration only holds up when the dependency tracking behind it is real, which is where Plug Power is the closer analog. I owned $100K/month budgets across multiple business units, running Paid Search, Paid Social, SEO and lifecycle email as one integrated plan rather than separate line items, cutting CPA 25% and cost per lead 50% by unifying the Mar-Tech stack for closed-loop reporting. That same role is where I built the leadership decks and ran the OKR cadence your posting calls execution governance: a weekly and quarterly rhythm that catches a stalled launch before it shows up in the pipeline number.

The matrixed-navigation and commercial-orientation side of this role is not new territory either. At Applied Materials I build forecasting models across multiple product groups with Sales, Engineering and Accounts, the same audience-and-demand input a campaign brief needs, and I automate the recurring reporting behind it with AI agents built on Claude so the readout is ready before the next launch starts. At Pixis, I carried P&L and revenue targets across an 8-client, $15K-$90K/month portfolio and cut churn 50% by making the escalation call before an account went sideways, the same judgment a matrixed org asks for when three teams want three different things from one campaign.

Mid-Market is the segment where a campaign brief and a sales handoff either stay in sync or drift apart fast. I would bring the same habit that held at Sensata and Plug Power: build the integrated plan, run it across every channel in one cadence, and tie the readout back to pipeline every time.
