Hiring Team, Visa

Your posting describes a day-to-day marketing lead who runs programs for a client portfolio end to end, not a single campaign at a time. That is the job I had at Pixis: I managed client marketing for 8 accounts at once with an 8-person team, carrying P&L and revenue targets across $15K to $90K monthly budgets per account. When churn started climbing, I did not wait for a quarterly review; I rebuilt the account strategy and refreshed the creative, and churn dropped 50% while one account hit 3x ROAS in a single month. That is the instinct your segment needs from whoever owns research, creative development and campaign execution for a client roster at once.

Translating business objectives into a marketing plan is also the center of my current work, not a new skill I am picking up for this application. At Sensata I turned a launch objective for a new sensing product line into the GTM plan that ran it, across North America and Europe, and it closed its first year at $2M-plus in revenue with a 15% lift in launch conversion. At Applied Materials now, I size the semiconductor market with Sales, Engineering and Accounts, the kind of matrixed, cross-functional structure your posting names directly, and turn that research into the pricing and timing calls the business runs on.

Executive presence shows up in my work with the people who sign off on the plan, not just the people who execute it. At Sensata I partnered with senior executives on multimillion-dollar customer quotes and revenue models, and at Plug Power I built the $100K-per-month marketing plans myself and presented them to leadership for approval. On channel range, I have run paid and organic programs across Google, Microsoft, Meta and LinkedIn, plus retail media and non-English markets at Pixis, so a segment that spans digital, creative and sponsorship-adjacent work is familiar territory, not a stretch.
