Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar

San Francisco Bay Area, CA | arokhith@gmail.com | +1-929-563-9974

October 31, 2026

Hiring Team, EverTrue

Your posting wants a PMM who can take a launch from positioning to a battlecard a rep actually opens, not a slide deck nobody touches again. At Sensata, I built that system for a new sensing-product launch: the positioning, the battlecards and case studies behind it, and the demo narratives that gave 50+ reps a story to sell, which moved their win rate 30%. EverTrue's launches ladder up to specific personas, annual giving, major gifts, advancement leadership, and that persona-first positioning work is the same discipline, just a different buyer.

I get to that positioning by sitting with the people who have to say it out loud. 30+ structured interviews with OEMs and distributors told me where the technical story and the buyer's real question diverged, and that work lifted conversion 15% on priority launches. Win/loss signal and competitor tracking across EMEA and the US fed straight back into how we launched and priced the next release, the same adoption-and-win-rate loop your posting asks a PMM to own here.

I run the full launch motion end to end: release notes, internal enablement, customer communications and campaign assets, coordinated across Product, Sales and Customer Success without dropping any of them. I have also marketed a product built on AI before. At Applied Materials I automate my own recurring market and competitive analysis with agents built on Claude instead of rebuilding the same report every cycle, and I built an AI job-matching platform's entire narrative from a blank page, positioning, messaging and pricing, with no playbook to hand it off to.

Turning fundraising technology into messaging and launches that help a sales team win is a genuinely interesting problem, and I would like to help EverTrue's Sales and Customer Success teams tell that story next. Proof trail at adhi-product.vercel.app/ref/evertrue.

Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar