Hiring Team, LaunchDarkly

Your posting asks for someone who can tell the difference between one account's complaint and a signal that should change the pricing model company-wide. I made exactly that call running the Bleeders and Leakers program at Sensata: reading deal terms, competitive gaps and customer willingness to pay across hundreds of accounts, then turning the repeatable patterns into negotiations that recovered $700K plus in margin in two quarters and raised distributor margins from 53% to 61%.

I have since built the system-of-record side of that same discipline. PriceKeel, the company I founded, reads a live discount exception inside the deal platform and recommends a guardrail learned from a company's own closed-won and closed-lost history, the evidence-to-recommendation path your posting describes. I built the audit trail myself so Finance gets an explainable record behind every pricing decision instead of a verbal justification after the fact, the structured system of record for field evidence and decisions your role is asked to establish and maintain.

The field-research side is not new either. At Sensata I designed and ran 30 plus customer interviews with OEMs and distributors ahead of a product launch, the same structured listening your posting asks for across Sales, Solutions Engineering and Customer Success, then used what I heard to shape GTM pricing and channel decisions that drove $2M plus in first-year revenue. At Applied Materials I partner with Sales, Engineering and Accounts to turn scattered field and technical input into one market view, then build the competitive, value-based pricing behind it.

What I would bring to LaunchDarkly is the habit of treating pricing as a decision problem with one clear owner, not a committee exercise. I have sat in the Finance seat asking for proof, the Sales seat asking for a workable number, and the founder's seat accountable for both, so I know how to write a recommendation that survives all three conversations.
