Hiring Team, Zinier

You describe this role as the work of a strong consulting Associate, done from inside a growth-stage B2B SaaS company instead of a firm. I have already run that loop. At Simon Vision Consulting I led a five-person team that took a client from a long list of 170 facilities down to a sized market of 28, built personas across four verticals, and presented the GTM and pricing recommendation straight to that client's leadership. Research to point of view to a finished deck in front of the people who decide, which is the exact arc your posting describes.

I am running a version of the same loop right now as founder of PriceKeel. I scope each prospect's pricing problem myself, shape the fix, and build the pitch deck and proposal that carries it into a pilot conversation, then I set up and run the CRM, CPQ and deal-approval workflow behind it because there is no one else to hand it to. That same habit showed up at Sensata, where I traced a bleeding distributor-margin problem to its root cause, built the negotiated fix myself off competitive gaps and customer willingness to pay, and tracked it until it held: $700K plus recovered in two quarters.

The executive-communication side of this role is familiar too. At Applied Materials I turn raw input from Sales, Engineering and Accounts into one shared market view for a fast-growing segment, with no reporting line to anyone in that room, and I carry P&L targets through an OKR cadence of weekly and quarterly business reviews. I use Claude agents to clear the repetitive research and formatting out of my way, which is the same kind of leverage your posting asks for without outsourcing the actual thinking.

What draws me to this specific seat is the breadth: business development, partnerships, strategy and GTM in one role instead of split across four. I would like fifteen minutes to talk through where that generalist range could help the Founder's Office first.
