Hiring Team, Samsung SDS America

B2B SaaS digital marketing breaks at one specific seam: the gap between paid traffic and the website, where UTMs are inconsistent, suppression lists are stale, and "net-new" leads are not actually net-new. The fix is rarely a new tool. It is rewriting the tagging spec, fixing the routing rules, and getting Marketing and Sales to agree on one funnel number. That is most of what your JD is asking for, and it is the part of the work I want to do.

I have run that exact rebuild at Plug Power. I wrote the UTM spec, rebuilt GTM containers from scratch, fixed Salesforce campaign attribution, and stitched ad click through Adobe Audience Manager and CRM all the way to SQL. CPA dropped 25%, conversion went up 20%, and for the first time the team could tell a CFO which dollar bought which lead. The tooling at Samsung SDS is different (Eloqua and MySales rather than Salesforce + Adobe), but the operating model transfers cleanly. Eloqua is a week-one ramp, not a new craft.

On the website side, I built SwipeHire end-to-end. Solo, on Python and React. CMS and landing pages, GA4 and GTM event tracking from day one, schema and metadata, internal linking, and eight A/B tests on activation flows. 50+ users, +25% activation. I instrumented success before I shipped, which is what made the experiments useful instead of decorative.

On the SEO side, I have done both the easy work (Plug Power keyword research, metadata, on-page) and the unglamorous work (GenY D2C Shopping feed cleanup, schema fixes, internal linking on category pages that delivered 16x ROAS once they were actually crawlable). Technical SEO is the tax content SEO pays to work, and I have paid it on every site I have touched.

One honest note. I have run LinkedIn paid at Plug Power and Pixis, and organic community work at SwipeHire (Reddit threads, weekly product updates, daily updates to early users). I have not personally posted on a corporate LinkedIn page every weekday. The strategy and content-calendar discipline are there. The daily organic cadence is execution muscle I will build in week one.

Boston-based, open to a relocation conversation for Ridgely Park. Happy to walk through any of the above in more detail.
