Hiring Team, Skimmer

Product marketing for vertical service-industry SaaS breaks at one specific seam: positioning gets written in language the product team uses internally, not language the practitioner speaks on a Tuesday afternoon. Most teams ship a one-pager that talks about "scheduling efficiency" and "service delivery optimization" while the pool pro on the truck would say "I stopped losing routes when storms hit." The PMMs who win in vertical SaaS are the ones whose customer-interview cadence runs continuously, whose win/loss synthesis lives in an actual document the sales team reads on Monday, and whose competitive monitoring catches the moment a competitor reframes a feature before it shows up in a deal review.

I run that cadence at Sensata today. The customer-story pipeline I own is built on 30+ structured customer interviews, competitive analysis on 10+ players, and a positioning rewrite that came directly from the primary research. The sales enablement library that came out of it (decks, case studies, battlecards, FAQs) shipped to 50+ reps; win rate went up 30%. The work the JD describes is the work I do.

On commercialization and GTM, the multi-region launch motion at Sensata covered NA, EU, and three regions with localized messaging and channel mix tied to per-region pricing context. $2M+ first-year pipeline. +35% qualified leads. Simon Pricing Analytics coursework grounds the monetization-strategy side; the muscle is operational, not theoretical.

On AI tools in the daily workflow, the JD's verbatim language is the one I have already lived in. Four Anthropic Claude certifications come from running prompt-based iteration as my actual workflow. SwipeHire shipped solo on Python, OpenAI API, and React. A Claude draft-and-critique pipeline I productized delivers 8x velocity on copy variants. Claude, ChatGPT, and Gemini are not aspirational tools; they are the loop I work in daily.

On the cross-functional connective-tissue side, the work travels. Plug Power: 4-vendor MarTech RFP coordinating 6 internal stakeholders across Sales + IT + Marketing + Procurement. Pixis: 8-client B2B SaaS book with weekly client CFO QBRs. The translation work between market, product, and sales is the work I have been doing.

Austin or Remote works. Open to relocating. Resume attached.
