Hiring Team, TikTok Shop

I've managed $1.4M in e-commerce campaign budgets across three continents. I've run the kind of campaigns your JD describes -- Shopping festivals, seasonal pushes, cross-category promotions -- just on Google and Meta instead of TikTok. I want to bring that to the platform where e-commerce is actually exciting right now.

At Pixis, I directed an 8-person team running campaigns for global D2C and e-commerce brands. The work wasn't "set a budget and check back Friday." It was daily optimization cycles -- adjusting promotion strategy, reallocating spend across categories, coordinating with account managers and creative teams, and presenting performance data to client executives who wanted to know why this week was different from last week. I delivered 3x ROAS in one month for a leading e-commerce brand by restructuring the entire funnel: Shopping feed cleanup, promotion testing, smart bidding, and creator-driven content expansion. Churn dropped 50% because clients saw the results and stayed.

At GenY Medium, I managed the entire e-commerce campaign stack for a D2C brand -- catalog optimization, seasonal promotion strategy, Shopping and Advantage+ campaigns, budget pacing. 16x ROAS. The founders used my weekly SQL dashboards to make every budget decision. That's the level of campaign ownership your JD is hiring for.

What I think makes me different from other applicants: I don't just execute campaigns. I build the systems that make campaigns measurable. At Plug Power, I automated the entire MarTech stack from scratch (Salesforce, Adobe Analytics, GA, GTM) so we could track ROI end-to-end. That infrastructure mindset means I'm not just optimizing the campaign in front of me -- I'm building the reporting and analytics foundation so every campaign after it gets better.

TikTok Shop is where e-commerce meets content meets community. The campaigns that work here won't look like traditional retail promotions -- they'll be creator-led, content-native, and built for a feed, not a search bar. I've worked with creator-driven content at Pixis, I've optimized Shopping feeds that live inside discovery platforms, and I've managed the cross-functional coordination this requires (account managers, creative teams, product, R&D). I'm ready to do it at TikTok's scale.
