Hiring Team, The Nielsen Company

The best copywriter for a measurement company is someone who can read a methodology paper and turn it into a landing page. Nielsen's buyer is a CMO or a data team lead who needs to trust the numbers before they trust the brand. That is a translation problem before it is a writing problem. I have spent four years translating technical into accessible, and I now run that translation with an AI-accelerated content pipeline that fits exactly the workflow a Senior Digital Marketing Specialist needs in 2026.

Writing the technical into the human. BE Mechanical Engineering out of BITS Pilani and MS Marketing Analytics at Simon (Rochester). At Sensata I translate industrial sensor spec sheets into buyer-facing positioning: 30+ customer interviews cut into the 20% of quotes reps can actually use, four vertical battlecards for 50+ reps, launch copy that shipped $2M+ first-year revenue and +35% qualified leads. At Plug Power I wrote the B2B hydrogen-energy story for a technical buyer audience: email, landing copy, SEO content, all balancing keyword discipline with readable prose. -25% CPA, +20% conversion. I do not write "marketing copy." I write proof that the engineer-in-the-room can actually trust.

HubSpot is home. Pardot is one week. I rebuilt Plug Power's full MarTech stack from scratch with HubSpot at the center: lifecycle cadences for onboarding, nurture, and winback; persona segmentation; automated sequences tied to journey stages. Pardot and Marketo share the exact same event-driven mental model; ramp is a week, not a quarter. At SwipeHire I shipped the whole lifecycle solo: landing, signup, onboarding A/B sequence, lifecycle emails, cohort retention dashboards.

Persona-specific content at journey-stage precision. Pixis taught me this at enterprise scale: 8 enterprise clients across fashion, CPG, and retail, each with a measurement-skeptical CMO at the top of the funnel and an AdOps team at the bottom. I wrote per-vertical playbooks Sales used for expansion pitches and per-journey-stage case studies that cut churn 50% across the book. Different personas get different proofs in the shape of their own category.

AI-accelerated content pipeline, from the builder's side. I run a Claude draft-and-critique content pipeline in production (one call drafts, a second scores, a human gate ships) for 8x variant velocity at consistent E-E-A-T quality. Four Anthropic Claude certifications including Building with the Claude API. When a Senior Specialist in 2026 needs to 10x email variant output and A/B at pace, that is the operating pattern I already run, not a tool I need to learn.

SEO without killing readability. Plug Power B2B SEO + keyword clusters for a technical hydrogen-energy audience. GenY Medium D2C Google Merchant + SKU-level SEO (16x ROAS). SwipeHire schema markup + Core Web Vitals + structured-output pipelines. Keyword discipline and readable prose are not a trade-off; they are the same problem solved with editorial judgment.

Would welcome 20 minutes on the current Nielsen content priorities and where the email + web copy gap is biggest right now.
