Hiring Team, Google

At GenY Medium I rebuilt the Google Merchant Center and Meta catalog feeds behind a run of D2C storefronts and turned that cleanup into 16x ROAS. That is the same muscle this role asks for: getting the product feed, the site presentation and the shopper-facing content right so a hardware line actually converts.

I have also run the launch side of that work. At Sensata I owned GTM strategy and launch content for new sensing products across North America and Europe, positioning technical specs as customer value and driving $2M+ in first-year revenue, while partnering daily with Sales and Engineering the way your posting describes working across Creative, UX, Analytics and Sales. At Pixis I cleaned up shopping feeds and rebuilt creative for an 8-client portfolio, including a full-funnel restructure that delivered 3x ROAS in a single month for a fashion brand, and at Plug Power I built landing pages and lead flow on the WordPress and Pardot CMS stack.

Right now at Applied Materials I build the forecasting and market-sizing models that sit between Engineering, Sales and the business, and I automate the repetitive parts of that analysis with AI agents built on Claude, the same AI fluency the posting calls out for site content and launch work.

Hardware categories live and die on how the storefront tells their story. I would like to bring the merchandising, launch content and cross-functional GTM work above to the Google Store team.
