Hiring Team, Pepper Content

Your posting says you measure this role on what gets done, not what gets discussed. That is the exact bar I hold myself to running PriceKeel: I built the guardrail engine and audit trail from a blank page, set up the CRM, CPQ, forecast and pipeline reviews and deal-approval process myself, and I am running pilots with early customers while carrying the fundraising narrative at the same time. Nobody handed me a brief. I wrote one, shipped a v1, and I am still testing it against real customers.

The AI transformation piece is already my day job, not a slide I am pitching you. At Applied Materials I converted a manual, repetitive analysis workflow into one run by agents built on Claude, the same identify-the-workflow-and-rebuild-it-AI-first motion your posting describes. I would rather ship that v1 in week two than spend week one in a room debating which workflow to pick first.

The ask to scale playbooks and bring operational rigour to areas that are still founder-led is also a program I have already run end-to-end. At Sensata, the Bleeders and Leakers margin program did not exist until I built it: I ranked 1,200 pricing opportunities against a $627M target across 3 regions and 4 product families, the kind of scope a central COE would own, and recovered $700K plus in margin in two quarters while lifting distributor margins from 53% to 61%. I got promoted from Product and Growth Marketing to Pricing Lead in 10 months once that program proved it could run without me checking in daily, which is the part that tells you the handoff actually held.

I also built the weekly and quarterly business reviews and leadership decks that gave executives real-time visibility into that program, and at GenY Medium I was the daily liaison between regional, localization and analytics teams, so the India-US bridge your Founder's Office needs is a motion I already know, not one I would be learning on the job.

What I would bring on day one is a founder's bias for shipping a v1 over running a third meeting, the operating discipline to build the dashboard and the review cadence that makes a problem visible within a day, and a habit of following a number all the way to its root cause instead of discussing it.
