Hiring Team, Fivetran

At Plug Power I closed keyword-strategy gaps that raised organic search visibility 35%, while running the paid side myself and automating the WordPress-to-Pardot lead flow that cut cost per lead in half. Those were not three separate projects handed to three specialists; they were one person treating the website as the growth surface, which is the split your posting is actually describing across Fivetran.com and getdbt.com.

The experimentation half is not new to me either. I built the GA4 and SQL KPI frameworks at Sensata that turned 50,000-plus connected devices into adoption signals, then wrote the business requirements that told engineering and sales what those signals meant, work that lifted feature adoption 18% and conversion 15% on priority launches. Earlier, at GenY Medium, I ran the SEO and database audits myself, backlinks, keywords, internal linking, and used what I found to lift a B2B client's conversion rate 36% and revenue 25%. I read a test result and act on it in the same week, not hand it off and wait.

I also hire and mentor the people who run alongside me: I built and mentored an 8-person team at Pixis carrying real P&L targets, and I now automate the repetitive side of my own reporting with Claude AI agents as Strategic Marketing III at Applied Materials, so the time goes to the roadmap instead of the dashboard. Two data-heavy sites and a marketing team that expects to move fast is exactly the kind of problem I want next.

I would like to bring that website-as-growth-surface track record to Fivetran and getdbt.com. Proof trail at adhi-growth-ai.vercel.app/ref/fivetran.
