Hiring Team, Meesho

I already run a CEO's agenda as my day job, just on my own company. PriceKeel is the B2B SaaS pricing product I founded: I built the guardrail engine, set up the CRM and pipeline reviews, and I am the one person raising the first round while running pilots with early customers. Your posting calls this "a leadership role, not a support role," built around owning outcomes instead of managing inputs. That is the only way I have worked for the past year, and it is what I would bring to the CEO's office at Meesho.

Inside larger companies I have run that same instinct at scale. At Applied Materials I partner across Sales, Engineering and Accounts to turn scattered field input into one market view, and I run the operating cadence, OKRs plus weekly and quarterly business reviews, that keeps cross-functional teams pointed at the same number while I carry P&L and revenue targets. At Sensata I sat close enough to the executive team to build the AP26 revenue models and site-transition strategy myself, and recovered $700K+ in margin in two quarters by taking a cross-functional negotiation program from problem definition to a closed result. Designing an operating rhythm and staying in the room with senior leadership are not new territory for me; they are the job I already do.

I also know the marketplace and D2C e-commerce side of this. I hired and managed an 8-person team running 8 client accounts at Pixis, including Amazon Ads and Criteo retail media spend, and before that I bridged regional marketing, localization and analytics teams for a D2C e-commerce portfolio at GenY Medium. I have hired and managed teams from that Pixis pod to the team behind my own product, SwipeHire, so shaping how a team works is familiar ground too, not just running the numbers behind it.

One more habit worth mentioning: I already automate recurring analysis and reporting with AI agents built on Claude, the kind of leverage a fast-moving CEO's office needs when the cadence never stops. Proof trail at adhithyabhaskar.vercel.app/ref/meesho.
