

Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar

San Francisco Bay Area, CA | arokhith@gmail.com | +1-929-563-9974

September 22, 2026

Hiring Team, AI Fund

Your posting asks for an AI-native mindset: someone who builds a custom app for a workflow instead of waiting on someone else to build it. I wrote the PRD, scoped the MVP and shipped an AI job-matching platform (Python, OpenAI API, React) to 50+ early users on my own, and I run the same instinct at Applied Materials now, where I automate recurring market and pricing analysis with AI agents built on Claude instead of doing that work by hand every cycle.

The writing side of this role is the part I'd want to talk about first. At Sensata I owned go-to-market for a new sensing product line and had to turn genuinely technical sensor capability into copy that OEM and distributor engineers would act on, not marketing language that bounced off a technical reader. That positioning work lifted conversion 15% on priority launches, and the sales-enablement decks and case studies I wrote off the same research moved win rates 30% for 50+ reps. Writing for an audience that can tell when you're bluffing on the technical detail is a specific skill, and it's the one I've built my launches around.

The program-management half of the role, coordinating internal stakeholders and external partners on one integrated campaign, is the same motion I run coordinating Sales, Engineering and Accounts at Applied Materials, and it's what I ran managing a 100+ feature backlog with Engineering across 3 regions at Sensata. Multi-channel launches fail at the handoffs, not the strategy slide, and that's the part I actually enjoy owning.

AI Fund's model, co-founding companies instead of just funding them, means the marketing seat gets pulled into product decisions earlier than most PMM roles allow. I'd want that seat for the AI course launches on your learning platform. Proof trail at adhi-product-ai.vercel.app/ref/ai-fund. Happy to talk whenever works on your side.

Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar