Hiring Team, Loop AI

When Sensata needed a go-to-market for a sensing product line that did not exist yet, I built it from the ground up: positioning, pricing, channel and launch, with no existing motion to inherit. That line closed its first year at $2M plus in revenue. Your posting asks for exactly that instinct, a first dedicated marketer who builds the function instead of joining one already running, and that is the work I already know how to do.

The sales enablement half of this role is where I would start. I built the decks, battlecards and case studies that 50+ reps used against OEM and distributor accounts, and win rates went up 30% because the material matched the stage a rep was actually in, not a generic one size fits all pitch. I also do not wait for the roadmap to hand me an assumption: I ran 30+ structured interviews with OEMs and distributors before writing a line of messaging, then checked that read against SQL and GA4 usage data before anything shipped. Your posting wants someone who puts AI workflows to work scaling tasks and refining messaging, and that is work I already run day to day. At Applied Materials I automate the repetitive side of market and pricing analysis with AI agents built on Claude, so more of the week goes to the judgment call and less to the spreadsheet.

Loop AI's roster spans restaurant and retail operators that each run their own back office playbook, and that is the same multi vertical pattern I have run before: an 8 client portfolio at Pixis where every account got its own strategy, plus automotive and industrial segmentation at Sensata. Positioning a platform that has to hold up across finance, operations, marketing and analytics inside one company is the same translation problem, just with more functions in the room.

Partnering with founders on executive messaging and fundraising narratives is the part of this role I would enjoy most. It is the same high conviction writing, just pointed at a board instead of a sales floor, and verifying every claim with engineering before it ships is a discipline I already hold myself to.
