Hiring Team, Zamp

Your posting says this seat gets "a front-row seat to the entire business," with strategy, operations, finance and partnerships all landing on the same desk. That is the actual shape of the company I run myself. At PriceKeel I set the strategy, manage investor relations and fundraising for our first round, and built the CRM, CPQ and deal-approval process from zero, all while running pilots with early customers. There is no department to hand the unowned problem to; it comes to me, and I have to turn it into a decision.

The clearest proof I can point to is the Bleeders and Leakers program at Sensata: a margin mandate with no existing owner across a $627M business. I built the dashboard that turned 1,200 scattered pricing opportunities into a $433M shortlist, then negotiated $700K plus of it back into margin in two quarters, working directly with senior executives on the AP26 models and site-transition calls the outcome depended on. In the same stretch I raised distributor and channel-partner margins from 53% to 61%, which only happens by building the kind of partnership your posting calls out under strategic alliances, not by running a spreadsheet alone.

Global expansion and market entry are not new either. I owned GTM for new sensing products across North America and Europe at Sensata, pricing and channel included, and ran the customer interviews with OEMs and distributors that fed the fixes behind a 22-point lift in satisfaction. At Applied Materials today I turn input from Sales, Engineering and Accounts into one market-sizing view and run the OKR cadence and leadership decks behind our weekly and quarterly reviews, the same operating rhythm a founder's office needs underneath investor updates and board decks. I have also hired and managed teams at every stop, from an 8-person account team at Pixis to the team behind SwipeHire, so talent and recruiting are not a new lane either.

What I'd bring on day one is comfort sitting inside ambiguity long enough to turn it into a number, across strategy, partnerships, fundraising or customer experience, whichever one is on fire that week. Proof trail at adhithyabhaskar.vercel.app/ref/zamp.
