Hiring Team, Intuit

When Sensata needed a go-to-market motion for a brand-new line of sensing products, I built it end to end: positioning, channel campaigns and a launch plan that took the line to $2M+ in first-year revenue and lifted conversion 15% on the priority launches. That is the same shape of work your posting describes for the accountant segment: own the story, then get it into the channels that actually reach the buyer.

Channel campaigns and competitive analysis are not separate skills for me, they run together. At Sensata I tracked competitor positioning and channel activity across EMEA and the US to find where purchasing patterns and market share were shifting, then fed that straight into the next campaign, generating +35% qualified leads on one launch alone. As Pricing Lead I sat with senior executives shaping multimillion-dollar customer quotes and revenue models, the kind of storytelling that turns a product into a narrative a buyer signs off on, and built the sales enablement decks and case studies that lifted rep win rates 30%.

The AI line in your posting is not new territory either. At Applied Materials I run AI agents built on Claude to automate the competitive and market-sizing research that used to eat a week of every planning cycle, so positioning stays current instead of stale. I built a small AI product of my own too: a job-matching platform where I owned ICP definition, competitor teardowns and positioning, then modeled subscription pricing from willingness-to-pay research, the same GTM instinct scaled down to a one-person team.

I would like to put this GTM, channel and competitive-intelligence work behind Intuit's accountant segment. Proof trail at adhi-product-ai.vercel.app/ref/intuit.
