Hiring Team, Heavenly Secrets

I founded PriceKeel from a blank page: no product, no team, no CRM, just a hunch that B2B SaaS pricing decisions needed an audit trail nobody had built yet. I designed the guardrail engine, set up the CRM and deal-approval process myself, and I am now running pilots while raising the company's first round. Your post asks for someone who has built from 0 to 1 with founders and can carry a high-priority initiative without waiting to be handed the mandate. I am living that right now, not describing it from a past role.

Pilgrim has gone from a fast-growing challenger to a brand doing hundreds of crores in revenue in a single year, and that kind of growth curve breaks the informal systems that got a company through its first few years. That is the exact seam I have worked before: at Sensata I took the Bleeders and Leakers program from a vague "margin is leaking somewhere" mandate to a $433M shortlist and $700K+ recovered in two quarters, working directly with senior executives who needed a number, not a deck. At Applied Materials today I turn scattered input from Sales, Engineering and Accounts into one market view and run the OKR cadence behind weekly and quarterly business reviews, so a founder is not the only person holding the whole picture.

I also know the D2C side of this specifically. At Pixis I ran an 8-person team across 8 D2C client accounts with full P&L ownership, and before that I sat inside D2C e-commerce operations at GenY Medium. A Chief of Staff who has already lived inside the category you sell in gets useful faster than one who has to learn it on the job.

What I would bring on day one is a habit of turning an open-ended problem into an owner, a decision and a number, plus the founder-side instinct to build the system so the next version of that problem does not need me in the room. Proof trail at adhithyabhaskar.vercel.app/ref/heavenly-secrets.
