Hiring Team, Quizlet

Your posting is explicit that the tool matters less than the ability to build: audience segmentation, triggered journeys, templates and campaign QA, end to end. I built exactly that muscle at Plug Power, where I automated the WordPress and Pardot lead flow from scratch, cutting cost per lead 50%, and then ran 15+ A/B tests on the campaigns it fed.

At Sensata I led digital and paid launch campaigns that generated +35% qualified leads, and built the KPI and segmentation frameworks in SQL and GA4 behind them on 50K+ connected devices, the same measurement discipline your role uses to decide what earns a place in the inbox and what gets retired. I also translated technical product features into customer-facing messaging that lifted conversion 15%, the brief-to-build work that has to sound like a person, not a system.

The experimentation habit carries across every stop: at Pixis I used Amplitude and Tableau to lift campaign ROAS 40% through segmentation-driven testing across 30+ campaigns, and at Applied Materials I now automate the repetitive half of reporting and copy iteration with AI agents built on Claude, pushing further into that the way your posting asks for.

I would like to bring that build-first lifecycle discipline to Quizlet. Proof trail at adhi-growth-ai.vercel.app/ref/quizlet.
