

PITCH DECK | EMERGENT CHIEF OF STAFF, FOUNDER'S OFFICE

A company whose product is AI agents that write and maintain code on their own needs a Founder's Office running on the same instinct. I already build that instinct into every role I take.

A record of turning loosely defined, cross-functional priorities into owners, decisions and a number, paired with AI-agent workflows already running in daily production, not a personal productivity habit.

$700K+ / 2 quarters - Bleeders & Leakers margin recovery, from a vague mandate to a negotiated outcome

1,200 / $433M - pricing opportunities synthesized into one leadership shortlist

PriceKeel - founder and CEO, built the guardrail engine and audit trail myself

AI agents on Claude - in daily production use today at Applied Materials

SwipeHire - shipped an AI platform zero-to-one, PRD to 50+ users

Running the Founder's Office at a company that automates software development is not a scheduling job. It is a systems problem, at the same speed as the product.

What that actually requires

Turning loosely defined, ambiguous priorities into owners, decisions, cadence and a measurable outcome, as a generalist, without waiting for a perfect mandate to arrive first.

A product mindset that can sit inside a fast-moving roadmap, understand what is actually shipping, and translate it into the plans and decks the founders and the org run on.

Project management and presentation skills strong enough to hold the room when priorities shift week to week, which they will at this stage of growth.

What I have already built at that layer

Took the Bleeders & Leakers program at Sensata from a vague "margin is leaking somewhere" mandate to a $433M shortlist and $700K+ recovered, negotiated in 2 quarters.

Founded PriceKeel, building the product myself end to end: a guardrail engine and audit trail that lets Finance check a pricing decision without calling me first.

Shipped SwipeHire, an AI job-matching platform, zero-to-one: wrote the PRD, scoped the MVP and hired the team that got it to 50+ early users.

The through-line: I have already built the product judgment, the AI-native cadence and the generalist range this seat asks for, just before anyone called it a Chief of Staff job.

What a generalist Founder's Office role at Emergent needs, and where the proof already sits.

What the role covers

A generalist with a product mindset who can move across functions without waiting to be assigned a lane, inside a company built on AI agents that write, maintain and test code.

Exceptional project management: taking an open-ended priority and building the owners, cadence and tracking that get it to a real outcome.

Outstanding communication and presentation skills, the connective tissue between the founders and every function around them.

My proof

Generalist, product mindset: founded PriceKeel and built its guardrail engine and audit trail myself, a zero-to-one product build from a blank page.

Project management, proven: built the FY2026 Power BI dashboard that turned 1,200 scattered pricing opportunities into a $433M leadership shortlist.

Communication and presentation: built the leadership decks and ran the OKR reviews behind weekly and quarterly business cycles at every employer I have had.

AI-native habits, already running: AI agents built on Claude run daily at Applied Materials, cutting manual synthesis out of a recurring reporting cycle.

Bleeders and Leakers: a vague margin mandate to a negotiated number, with the mechanism that kept producing it.

Built as the owner of a program with no existing dashboard, no existing owner list and no existing cadence, the same starting point a founder's "figure this out" priority usually looks like.

$700K+ / 2Q

Margin Recovered

Negotiated from competitive gaps and customer willingness to pay, against a $627M target.

1,200 / $433M

Opportunities Synthesized

Scattered signal across 3 regions and 20 product lines, turned into one shortlist leadership could prioritize.

53% to 61%

Distributor Margin Lift

Repriced parts sold through distribution in under 2 quarters once the decision was made.

The same instinct runs through PriceKeel and SwipeHire: build the product and the decision mechanism first, then let the AI-native cadence keep the number coming without a person re-doing the analysis every quarter.

What the first month running the Founder's Office at Emergent would look like.

WEEK 1 Sit inside the actual signal Talk to the functions feeding the founders' agenda today to find where synthesis is manual, delayed or duplicated, the same audit that grounded the Bleeders & Leakers program before a dashboard existed. ----- Why first: a generalist role built on assumptions instead of real bottlenecks is the fastest way to miss what the founders actually need.	WEEK 2-3 Ship the first owned outcome Take the single highest-friction, most ambiguous priority on the founders' list and carry it to an owner, a decision and a number, instrumented the way the Claude-agent automation at Applied Materials is today. ----- Why now: one real outcome that survives without a Chief of Staff in the room beats a week-one list of ideas.	WEEK 4 Turn the first win into the cadence Use what the first win proved to set the OKR and review cadence the founders can run without a Chief of Staff re-explaining it every week. ----- Why this fast: a cadence only earns trust by showing it moved a real decision first.

CLOSE

Emergent needs someone who treats the Founder's Office as a systems problem, not a scheduling one. I have already built that system, twice.

The core proof is Sensata and PriceKeel together: a $700K+ margin program that started as a vague mandate and ended as a repeatable, owned mechanism, and a product I built and shipped myself, guardrail engine and audit trail included, for a founder who needed to stop being the bottleneck on every call.

What is harder to find is someone who has done that inside a large, multi-region business and founded and shipped their own AI product, while already running AI agents on Claude in production rather than treating AI as a slide in a strategy deck. That combination is what a Founder's Office at a company like Emergent needs most.
