Hiring Team, Adyen

Your posting asks for someone to sit between Sales, Finance and Product, hold the pricing line on the region's most strategic deals, and still be the person a regional stakeholder calls first with a pricing question. I have run that exact seat before: at Sensata, I built the Bleeders and Leakers dashboard that ranked 1,200 pricing opportunities against a $627M target across 3 regions and 4 product families, then partnered with senior executives directly on the multimillion-dollar customer quotes that dashboard flagged. The data only mattered once it changed what a deal desk approved.

That is the part of pricing work I actually enjoy: turning a model into an action someone downstream has to sign off on. Raising distributor and channel-partner margins from 53% to 61% meant building the financial model with Finance, then testing with Sales what a partner would actually accept, because a value-based price that only survives in a spreadsheet is not a price. I carried P&L and revenue targets through that work and drove +12% YoY revenue and +8% market share via price realignment against 10+ competitors, which is the same loop your team runs: local-market pricing insight translated into action, not just a report.

At Applied Materials now, I build competitive, value-based pricing for a fast-moving, highly technical equipment market, partnering with Sales, Engineering and Accounts so field input becomes one pricing strategy instead of several conflicting ones across product groups. I also automate the recurring parts of that analysis with Claude-based AI agents, which is the same instinct behind driving adoption of a global pricing tool regionally: the tool only earns adoption if it saves someone real time.

What I bring beyond the resume is PriceKeel, which I am building and piloting right now: a decision-integrity layer for B2B deal pricing that gives Finance an audit trail for every discount exception. Designing that product end to end, from the guardrail logic to the pilot conversations, is the same muscle Adyen's Global Commercial Pricing and Monetization team needs from a regional pricing expert who can deliver a pricing initiative from concept through implementation, not just flag where the opportunity sits.
