Hiring Team, Inc42 Media

Inc42 Courses has taken D2CX through eight cohorts and 400-plus founders without, from the posting, a single operating system behind it yet. That is the exact gap I closed at Sensata: I built the FY2026 Bleeders and Leakers Power BI dashboard that gave leadership one live read on 1,200 pricing opportunities across three regions, four product families and twenty product lines, instead of each region keeping its own spreadsheet. A cohort calendar across content, design, marketing, growth, product and operations needs the same thing: one source of truth that replaces eight people's memory of what happened last time.

I carry P&L and revenue targets today as Strategic Marketing III at Applied Materials, and carried them for a multi-$100M business at Sensata, where recovering $700K-plus in margin in two quarters came from running one program end to end rather than splitting it across owners. I also ran a cross-functional launch for new sensing products across North America and Europe, aligning positioning, pricing, channel and launch timing into a single calendar that drove $2M-plus in first-year revenue. Turning "build what's next" into a repeatable launch plan, not a one-off push, is the part of this role I have already done, just in a different vertical.

At PriceKeel, the company I founded, I built the CRM, CPQ, forecast reviews and deal-approval process from nothing, because a program that depends on one person's memory is not a system. I hired and managed an 8-person team at Pixis carrying its own P&L across eight client accounts, and ran the board decks and OKR cadence behind SwipeHire, a product I shipped zero to one down to the PRD and the launch plan. Building the thing and running the operating rhythm behind it at the same time is not a new shape of work for me.

I would like to talk through where D2CX's next cohort scale-up loses the most time today and how I would take that off the critical path. Proof trail at adhithyabhaskar.vercel.app/ref/inc42-media.
