Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar

San Francisco Bay Area, CA | arokhith@gmail.com | +1-929-563-9974

October 13, 2026

Hiring Team, Loop

Your posting says this is a 0-1 and 1-10 role: some of what the Revenue Operations Lead owns at Loop doesn't exist yet, and the rest exists in rough form and needs to scale past one person. That is the exact shape of what I run at PriceKeel, a company I founded to be the deal-approval and discount-governance layer B2B sellers are missing. I set up the CRM and CPQ, the forecast and pipeline reviews, and the deal approvals from nothing, and I built the audit trail that gives Finance evidence it can defend. That is a fast path for standard deals and a sharper point of view on pricing exceptions, discounting and contract structure for everything else, which is almost exactly how your posting describes the commercial guardrails you want built.

Before that I built Sensata's Bleeders and Leakers pipeline from scratch: 1,200 opportunities ranked against a $627M target across 3 regions and 20 product lines, with win rate, avg $/win and stage distribution tracked by salesperson and product line. It surfaced $433M in margin gaps and recovered $700K+ in margin in two quarters. That is the forecast-leadership-can-bet-on muscle your posting asks for, built the same way: define the stages, instrument them, and make the number survive scrutiny.

Your system of record is HubSpot, and I have certified on it and used CRM and CPQ tooling the same way your posting describes: field definitions, pipeline hygiene, and approval workflows, not tickets filed for someone else to build. I like the part of this role that most RevOps candidates would rather skip, deciding which deals you take and on what terms, because that is where margin either survives or quietly leaks out between the quote and the close.

I would like to bring that discipline to Loop's revenue engine. Proof trail at adhithyabhaskar.vercel.app/ref/loop.

Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar